Richard Hawk Introduction

Let me begin this introduction by asking a few questions:

- Would you like to learn about ways to get your employees more involved in your safety program?
- Would you like to change the same ole safety blah, blah, blah, into something interesting and compelling?
- Would you like to find out what innovative ideas other organizations are doing to make safety fun and create a vibrant safety culture?
- Would you like to improve your company's safety performance?

If you answered "yes" to any of those questions, you are going to be glad you are here today. Our speaker, Richard Hawk specializes in these areas and has shared his helpful ideas, through his books, popular e-zine, monthly column in "Safety & Health" magazine, and talks which include being a keynote speaker three years in a row at the largest safety convention in the world hosted by the National Safety Council.

Before he started his own company in 1991, Richard spent ten years in the safety field at nuclear power facilities.

When he's not speaking or writing he spends his time doing what his wife of 38 years, Jackie, tells him to do. He's also an accomplished song writer, musician and avid pool player.

Today he's going to share with us what he's learned that will help us make safety fun and create a vibrant safety culture that reduces injuries.

Please join me in welcoming professional speaker and author from South Jersey, Richard Hawk.
